

No Longer an Orphan

When J and I prayed in January 2015, God met me in a very powerful way. But the results were different than I expected. I knew that J and I had named the root of my life-long struggles and named three generational spirits assigned to oppress me and possibly even my family. But even though we bound them, I saw that some of those things still take effect even though I know (and have been proclaiming) that they no longer hold authority over me.

However, as I have looked over the last year recently, one thing that I can testify to with all my heart is that one of them - the Orphan spirit - has lost its power over me. A key component to that was during one of our follow up sessions over Skype. I shared some recent struggles and after praying through my feelings, we asked Jesus to show me where he is in the root memory. And I saw him sitting next to me on my bed, ready to listen to me and help me resolve my troubles, but I was so used having to take care of myself that I didn't even think of asking him. I saw that it actually hurts his feelings when I don't give him a chance to show me how powerful and amazing he is. I felt his pain. And since then I started coming to him with every little thing, whenever I remembered. And he has been answering and I am amazed.

This is what I do with my troubles now: I first thank God for something in connection with the situation, then I say OUT LOUD what worries me, then I state my requests (e.g. ask for opposites of what I am afraid of) and then I thank him that he is going to do something about it. After that I face the challenge the best way I can, knowing that there is an invisible hand clearing the path before me. And within some time I usually see that he faithfully answered those things I asked him for.

I am no longer an orphan trying to do my best to earn some love, but a BELOVED daughter and bride, delighting in how amazing a Father and Husband I have. I have seen this manifested in my work. I am much better at saying no and not jumping on every need I see. My life has gotten a bit more restful. (There is still a long way to go :)

As to the other 2 spirits, they have been entrusted to my powerful God and in the proper time, they will lose their power over me completely as well.

All praise to God for this miracle!
